THE CRISIS PACKET. It will be recollected by many rea-ders that the Crisis belongs to the New-York and London line of packet ships, sailed from England the early part of last winter; and has never been heard of since the 9th of March, when she was spuken off the Banks of Newfoundland. It is generally believed that she was lost, with her whole crew, among the icebergs. A friend of ours power in Francisco. correct; it was obtained from the broker who procured clearances for The names are Net their buggage. The names are Net-fell and family, Mansony, Taffer, Dasser. Palmer, Hewson, Rundell, Otero Challett, Wick. Mr. Mansony wa well known in Boston, and was suppos ed by his friends here to have been on board the Crisis. In a paper published at New-York, entitled The Crystal Hunter, the following verses lately appeared, written on the supposed fate of the Crisis. Boston Courier.

She press'd to the north,
When the winter wind blow;
And the wave, with its froth,
O'er the binnacle flow.

The crew of her dock
Were the best of their kind;
And her chief had no speck
On his heart, or his mind. Her wings held the storm,
As a bird takes the breeze;
While her becatiful form,
Wrote its way on the seas. The whale saw the sweep Of the bold bearing ship;

An ! it rushed to the deep, Like a dog from the slip. The sea seemed to shrink Far away to the west: Yet in- just tipt the brink, Of the troubled sea's breast.

The Dolphin sprung back, When the yellow weed stoop'd;
Andit sought the warm track, Where the flying fish droop'd. The fog on the foam Gave a chill to the avave; As the away sought a hume, Where the winter birds lave.

Turn, packetship; turn!
For within thy broad hold,
Where the swinging lamps burn,
Slender beauty is cold. Ah, beauty is wild;
And the tears her cheeks blotFor she thinks of her child
Far away in his cot.

She hears her boy cry,
When the wind strikes the sail;
She fancies his sign,
In the stormy gull's wail,

And man's daring eye
Has the quickness of fear;
For the thoughts of home fly
To the storm with his tear. Fly, for vessel fly To thy home in the west; or thy watchman's weak cry Tells a tale for unrest.

There's blood on his lip;

There is cold at his heart;
For he sees the ice dip!
And the awful berg part! The crew shrick aloud,
While they trample the deck—
There's some seek the shroud;—

There's some seek the said.
Yet all think of a wreck! Alas! like the wheel

The ice gave its groan,
To the cry on the mast;
While beauty's slight moan.
In a moment was past. Oh God! and the brave!

And the wise! and the young!

To a bitter cold grave In a moment were flung! There was blood-but away-Away with the thought-

My own pulse's play
Has a chilly throb caught— To bed-ay, to bed-But forget the lost ship-Dream not of the dead-

Or the watchman's blood lip.
